Ten Reasons You Should Feel Safe on Campus

1. Security is staffed with officers 24/7. If you have to stay on campus late, you are not alone.

2. Employees can request to have an officer escort them to and from their vehicle by calling the security radio.

3. Our officers are required to have certifications in First Aid, CPR, and AED.

4. Security officers are also required to have their lethal weapons certification (ACT 235) and pepper spray certification.

5. Our campus has callboxes located outside of each building and in each parking lot for emergencies.

6. If your car does not start, you may request an officer’s assistance for a jump start by calling the security radio.

7. If you have locked your keys in your car, you may contact security for an officer’s assistance. However, due to liability concerns, our officers are not able to attempt to unlock a vehicle with power locks or side airbags.

8. College policy prohibits the carrying of weapons and guns on campus with the exception of law enforcement personnel.

9. In the event of campus emergencies, you can be notified right away through e-mail or text messaging. In order to receive this service you must sign up for e2campus on the college homepage.

10. For extreme emergencies, HACC has an emergency alert system that consists of loudspeakers in all buildings on the campus.
Theatre Professor Brenda Eppley recently returned from a semester as visiting lecturer in South Africa. As a Fulbright Scholar, Brenda lectured and directed at the University of the Free State in an academic and cultural environment quite different from HACC. Brenda lived in the city of Bloemfontein where tourists rarely visit. For many, she was the first American they had ever met.

Brenda’s project proposal included creating sustainable theatre workshops in surrounding townships. Townships are peripheral communities that surround South African cities and towns. Essentially, these communities are the remnants of apartheid and are the areas where the 48% of impoverished South Africans reside.

Brenda also served as a volunteer educational guide at the Cheetah Experience located just outside Bloemfontein. Much of the wildlife in Africa is highly endangered, and several species are facing imminent extinction. The Cheetah Experience exists to primarily breed endangered and indigenous big cat species with successful reintroduction into the wild. Each week Brenda had interaction with baby leopards, tigers, adult cheetahs, caracals, servals, wolves and meerkats.

Mid semester, Brenda spent ten days in Kenya. Her travels took her to the small village of Mwariki where resident women were utilizing micro business projects to generate income for education, medical treatment, and clean water. Upon her return, Brenda initiated a partnership with several professional theatre women in the Harrisburg area (one a former HACC student) to raise funds and donate supplies to Mwariki. The first project was completed in December. The partners are working with the village to further future projects.

In reflecting on her experience, Brenda concludes, “While South Africans collectively are easily the most welcoming people I encountered around the globe, racial tension, extreme poverty, and a government fraught with corruption presented hurdles that often seemed insurmountable. As a foreign observer, I could not help but share in the evident frustration towards the painfully slow progress made in a country bursting with possibilities. I fail to imagine a person traveling into the poorest sections and not feel the impulse to do something – anything – to aid the communities.”

Becoming a Fulbright Scholar is something Brenda encourages all faculty members to consider. “Our knowledge and skills as academics,” she states, “become powerful tools that have the ability to alter global communities and exact profoundly positive change.”
Choices for Sustainable Living

“I find that I think about things more — things I buy, things I eat, things I throw out. I see a much larger picture now, and I realize more than ever that I am a very important part of that picture.”
