Learn how the Chinese culture influences human development

This PSYC 209 Life Cycle Development in China course is designed to give students a unique opportunity to learn how human development may be shaped or impacted by the culture one lives in. Students will learn about Chinese history, traditions, customs, and more while exploring historically and culturally significant sites such as the Great Wall, the Forbidden City, the Summer Palace, the Terra Cotta Warriors Museum, and Yuyuan Garden. In addition, students will take a closer look at local people's lives through visits to a children's palace, a local resident's home, a senior citizens' home, a village, and via conversations with Chinese students at a local university.

During travel, students will be required to conduct a mini research project through collection of data from personal observations, surveys and/or interviews of the local people. The research projects are to help students gain insight about how human characters, behaviors, dreams, and concerns may reflect the culture they live in.

This is a required course for nursing majors and can work as a general transfer elective for most other HACC majors.
